The International Development Studies Program at Saint Mary’s University is seeking qualified applicants for the following course in the second semester (January-April) for the academic year 2016-2017. Applicants should note that this is a cross-level, undergraduate/graduate course. This is a part-time position governed by the terms and conditions of the current Saint Mary’s Collective Agreement with CUPE Local 3912.

Conflict, Security, and Development
(IDST 4843/6805, Monday 9-11:30am)

The purpose of this course is to critically examine the relationship between conflict, security, and development. Specific emphasis is given to building a theoretically informed understanding of both the causes and framings of conflict and war in various locations in the Global South, and to reviewing national and international responses and interventions, along with their appropriateness. The course utilizes case studies to animate the themes covered throughout the term.

Requirements: A PhD in International Development Studies or a closely related field. In exceptional circumstances, a candidate holding an MA in International Development Studies may be given consideration. Previous teaching experience is preferred. Preference will be given to qualified candidates with a background in critical perspectives on conflict, security, and development from a variety of theoretical traditions.

The part-time Faculty member will be responsible for all aspects of administering the course, including teaching, grading, and the holding of at least two office hours per week. Interested applicants should submit a cover letter, an up-to-date CV, and teaching evaluations or other evidence of successful teaching to:
